Beacon of hope to a waiting world Shining above is the starry throng, A rife in the murky clouds of wrong— Clouds that shall roll from their beams of light, Till the whole round dome is blue and bright.

The End of Booth.

John Wilkes Booth has gone to his final account. His body now lies, stiff and stark, in the Capital, smeared with dirt and blood, his soul, not less attainted, has passed from the sphere of mortal life. In smoke and flame he perished, and the red light of earth bore him off to those endless fires which burn for the breakers of the Divine law and the laws of human society. Of the many doomed and damned creatures of guilt, whose crimes have appalled the sense of the world and effended the sight of heaven. none stands to-day in the presence of his God with a deeper or darker iniquity and a direr eternity than the assassin of Abraham Lincoln.

What he must have suffered in his flight-crouching by day from quick pursuit—skulking by night from the bloodhounds of his own conscience—seeing in every bush the gleam of a bayonet—in every shadow the grim phantom of his murdered victim -hearing in every breeze the sound of the coming hoofs-in every sigh of the wind, in every rustle of the leaves, in every twitter of the birds in every tap of the wood-packer, in every hoot of the owl, the

"That this should be and that the man should live."

Did be count the hours, minutes, moments as they took their flight, each second in the accustomed cycle printing its brand upon his soul and brain? Did he pause and meditate the dreadful penalty of pause and meditate the dreadful penalty self-destruction? Did his humanity come back to him, and did he fall upon his knees and ask pardon of his God? Did he wish to live? Who shall tell?

Perhaps if we could pry into the infinite, we should see his dark spirit lying at the feet of the ever-living; and we should hear him pleading for mercy from the man whom he murdered; and we should behold the calm and genial features of that gentle spirit, radiant with immortality, look in pity on the wretch and point him to the bosom of his

John Wilkes Booth and Abraham Lincoln have met in the long Valhalla clositers. The debt is even. The balance is adjusted. We could have wished a different account. We could have wished to sate our own grisvance, and sid with our own bands, and by some process more meet with our hu-man estimate of his crime, the wreaking out of payment from him. But let it go. God is just and wise. The tale is told. They have met in the antechamber of those gloomy clositers, and they have

"Give them unto the shades; the just and good. The guilty and the blood-stained, side by side Before the mercy seat.

The beautiful extract above, on the immented triots drop a tear on the grave of the second Washington, they have the consolation of knowing that this, like every other blow of traitors, has recoiled upon their own heads.

Already inflexible, iron-served Johnson has withdrawn the amnesty—or dam-unsty—oath, which restored traitors to respectability and decency in society, but was inadequate to wash from their corrupt hearts and seared consciences the polution and murbers. Wherearts and seared consciences the polution and murbers. derous spirit of treason.

We thank God for imbuing Andrew Johnson with the patriotic and christian spirit which made him withdraw pardon from traitors, who are not, like the prodigal son, repentant, but who desire to return to their homes solely to recover their property, and intrigue for the destruction of Union men.

We see that Booth, who assassinated Mr. Lincoln. was a Lieutenant Colonel in the rebel army. The dispatches say that he is buried where no mortal will ever see him. This, we suppose, means that his infernal carcass has been thrown into the sea. This fore they get here. True, there is no sea in East allegations. Tennessee to put them in, but there are more ways to kill a dog than "choking him to death. Boys! look out for John H. Crozier, Sneed, Cro. Ramsey, United States of America — District of East

The Abolition of Slavery in Tennessee.

"E. D. M." the able and learned correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, in an article showing the advantages which must flow from the abolition of slavery, illustrates his subject by the introduction of Tennessee, as follows:

This State has just abolished slavery How is she to be affected by it? Will she lose anything? Will she suffer anything? Let the facts answer. Here are the statistics of slavery in Tennessee, as reported to the United States in 1860 :

Slave owners ... Slave owners, who hold less than five slaves hole number of slaves.....

ormous fraud upon the human intellect in the A. M., then and there to interpose their claims and utb, and the moral cowardice in the North, by make their allegations. aich a small and contemptible slave aristocracy has been allowed to govern this country. In Ten-nessee, a great and noble State, of 1,200,000 inhabi-who cannot lose one cent by abolition. There are 68,000 farms, and only 16,000 persons who own over four slaves, proving that three-fourths of the farms farms suffer anything for want of slavery to New let us look to the negroes. A very large part of them are house-servants, and need nothing. They them are house-servants, and need nothing. They and their masters would rather remain together.—

They can work for wages, can go to school, and cannot be sold. So of nearly all the farm laborers.—
And on the largest plantations the same arrangoments can be made as in Louisians to work the plantations at fixed wages, and plantation negroes to have their allotments and privileges as may be agreed on. Tennessee will rise from the abolition of slavery to be one of the richest and most populous States in this country. With incalculable advantages of soil, climate, and minerals, she has been retarded in her growth, checked in her prosperity, and kept in an unnatural condition, by the demoniac influence of slavery. She will rise from the nightmare of despotism with a rapidity and a grandeur which will astonish all beholders.

Every word of this is true. Whatever may have been the benefits to individuals resulting from the system of slave labor, the effect upon the general presperity was decidedly injurious. Now, that slavery has been abolished, we may expect, in a few years, great improvements in the condition of the people, and ultimately all that the most ranguine friends of freedom have prophesied.

has been allowed to govern this country. In Tennessee, a great and noble State, of 1,200,000 inhabitants, less than 10,000 slaveholders compelled the Legislature to pass an act of secession, defled a great popular majority, and carried the State into a bloody war, which has destroyed more than half her young men, and has revolutionized its Constitution and laws. If we suppose each slaveholder to be the head of a family (at the ordinary ratio,) there were 221,064 interested in slavery—that is, about one sixth of the population.
